Bio-Energetic Healer

NEWSLETTER      January-February 2012

ZE'EV KOLMAN'S MESSAGE

The time to be happy is now. The place to be happy is here. I wish you energy and beams of light to illuminate the horizons of the year before us.

I would like to take you with me on a spiritual adventure to the power of the mind! I will guide you with my experience.

Each and every human being utilizes his five senses. In addition, each individual has a gland that appears as a pinecone, whose leaves are open. In essence, every human being is born with the potential to become a channel. Due to a lack of development of these facilities, most of us never actually become channels!

What is the basis of these special attributes? When we arrive at a hospital, an electrocardiogram is administered. Electrodes are placed on our limbs and we are connected to an electric current, which registers on a graph. With all these instruments a conclusion is drawn...that in the human body there are electrical impulses and flows. Otherwise, the needle would not be able to register and there would be no purpose in being hooked up to electrodes. If there is electricity, there must be an electromagnetic field. In other words, there cannot be electricity without the existence of an electromagnetic field. In parapsychological terms, this electromagnetic field of the human body is called "astral body", or "aura".

What is this body? In this body is our entire emotional system. A medium is capable of seeing all of our "auras". Because his pinecone-shaped gland is fully open. In religious terminology "aura" is referred to as a "halo". Different religions illustrated this aura as a yellow circle surrounding the head of holy figures. People in previous generations were much more in tune astrally than in our generation. We are a generation of prosperity and technology, yet the progress of modern man has pushed us in a different direction. In previous generations there was no television, no radio, no lasers, no airplanes. But...there was a deeper appreciation and connection to “astral” vision, although people did not understand it. In the modern world of today, 90% of diseases are of psychosomatic origin.

What is psychosomatic illness? It is a physical manifestation of a mental or emotional problem. It is not always possible to cure the disease, because the quality of the soul has already been altered. But it is truly possible to ease the pain of the individual who is suffering. Bio-energy does not take the place of conventional medicine, in any way whatsoever. It aids and it strengthens the work of medicine.

Today, there is much discussion about holistic medicine. Many doctors are beginning to study the field.

What happens during a bio-energy treatment? At the time of the treatment, the healer aligns his body to the frequency of the electromagnetic field of the patient. Inasmuch as he is able to achieve the same frequency, the healer feels the areas of blockage in the patient. You probably are familiar with acupuncture charts. The acupuncture points are the electromagnetic field passages. If these points are blocked, there is no passage of energy and the result is psychosomatic sickness.

These passages can be unblocked through the use of needles. If your back hurts you, a needle is placed through your ear. You may ask why is the needle placed through the ear? The answer is that the energy path to the back goes through the ears in specific areas.

In my work we utilize the same principle, the same concept, only the methodology is different. In my work, there are no needles, no puncturing, no touching.

It has been demonstrated in hospitals that bio-energy treatments shorten a patient’s hospital stay. Several studies have been done substantiating this conclusion. When bio-energists were brought to hospitals and were asked to treat those patients who had undergone similar operations, the patients were divided into two groups. Half of them were given antibiotics, and the other half were also given bio-energy treatments. Those who were given bio-energy treatments found that their need for drugs was diminished and their hospital stays were shortened.

Slowly, people are coming to understand the field of alternative healing. This is dependent greatly on those who take advantage of treatment and come to understand and become aware of this phenomenon and realize that there is no magic, no voodoo, no witchcraft...and that it is natural and understandable, that the healer is merely linking the frequency of energy from his own body to the same level of frequency of the patient. The healer pinpoints the places of blocked energy and opens the passages, infusing his energy into the patient. Sometimes this energy is sufficient for a week, sometimes for years and many times for a lifetime. This is all dependent on the blocked energy passages and on the particular patient.

From The Ragged Edge of the World by Eugene Linden

In the fall of 1992, I was invited to meet with two celebrated brothers named Sydney and Tacuma Sapaim, who were shamans from the Xingu tribe in the Brazilian Amazon. They had been flown to the United States by a wealthy student of shamans and healers named Kamal Benjalloun so that they could participate in United Nations events celebrating the “Year of Indigenous Peoples.” I’d written a bit about healers and shamans for Time, so when I was contacted and asked about whether I’d like to interview the brothers, I immediately said yes, and then asked whether they might be willing to treat me as well. I was told they would,

and to bring a $100 bill. (For all its ties to the world of spirit, shamanism has its practical and materialistic side.)

I was eager to see the brothers because I had previously had good experiences with other healers, notably an Israeli named Zev [sic] Kolman. Zev called himself a “bioenergist,” and to paraphrase Kevin Cahill, while I may not have known what it meant, I did know what it felt like. Zev passed his hands over you, holding them several inches above your body, and at some point you began to feel a very pleasant tingling in your skin, interspersed with what seemed like mini-flashes of lightning between his hands and your body. It felt different from static electricity, and the energy seemed to gravitate to injured or weak areas. Even though I was in good health, I took the opportunity to experience what it was that Zev did. At my first session with Zev, witnessed by several people, my back audibly popped even though I was lying still and his hands were at least a foot above me.

I have had several subsequent sessions with Zev, and I still can’t explain what it is that he does. I can rule out chicanery – between patients he does not disappear into a closet to charge up his hands with static electricity. Nor can the energy be explained by some supercharged version of the placebo effect.

I always left sessions with him feeling absolutely terrific, though I can’t say whether improvements in the ailments that led me to see him were the result of natural healing or bioenergy. One thing I do have a hard time accepting is Zev’s explanation for his powers: He claims that his abilities suddenly appeared after being visited by aliens in the Negev Desert when he was in the military. Whatever the case, I don’t have a more logical explanation. He does seem to be a conduit for some form of energy, and I am not one to insist that something doesn’t exist simply because I can’t explain it.

Testimonials of the Month

Healing of Fibrocystic Breasts

For at least twenty years, I have had painful fibrocystic breasts and have required sonograms in addition to mammograms in order to get a good read. The typical advice was to “live with it”, until last summer when I needed several needle biopsies and a surgical biopsy, the results of which were benign but potentially troublesome. I knew that I would not want to live my life with these tests every year. After three in-person treatments and three long-distance ones with Mr. Kolman, I had my mammo/sono. The results: normal. What a relief. – Jane V.

Distant Healing for Hospitalized Accident Victim

For two and a half weeks of Mr. Edward A.’s four-week stay in intensive care, a coma had been induced in order to allow maximum healing for his broken ribs, leg, hip, and shoulder, as well as a bruised heart and lung. He had had two surgeries—first on his femur and tibia and then on his shoulder.

The same day he was moved from intensive care, and while he was still on a respirator, numerous attempts to get him to breathe independently had failed. Ze’ev Kolman sent distant healing directly to Mr. A. in Mercy Hospital on Long Island. His wife, sitting at his bedside, felt a tingling sensation during the healing session—an example of connecting sensations.

The following morning, Mr. A. began to breathe on his own. The medical staff was amazed, but believed he would need the respirator later in the day. He never needed it again. The second day, he ceased intravenous feeding and began eating soft foods, much to the amazement of the medical staff.

Mr. Kolman sent a second distant healing. Once again, Mr. A.'s wife felt the energy, a tingling sensation. She also noticed static on the television screen, but when she got up to shut off the set, she was startled to find that it had never been turned on.

On the third day, Mr. A. was sitting up and eating lasagna, once again to the amazement of the medical staff, which then requested information on Mr. Kolman's work. Mr. A. later underwent physical therapy and recuperated from his severe physical injuries. —Alan G.
